The Home of the Soul

In olden times, it was believed that the seat of the soul was the stomach, most likely for the reason that a man is never so completely used up as when his stomach is out of order. For the cure of ordinary stomach troubles, there is nothing quite so prompt and satisfactory as Chamberlain's Tablets. They strengthen the stomach and enable it to perform its functions naturally. Give them a trial. They only cost a quarter.

LUMBER
Back to Normal

Lumber has reached a price level, where it's value bears the true and proper proportion to the value of the products you farmers raise and sell. In other words, lumber prices today are consistent with prices on farm products.

There's nothing mysterious about it—just the old law of supply and demand—and a willingness on our part to play fair with our customer friends by reducing our prices to a point where you can afford to buy.

Right now your problem may be a barn, a shed or other building necessary to help you do your work better, more quickly or more economically. Or it may mean a new home, or repairing and remodeling the old one.

Bring your problem to us. Let us show you the facts. We have many plans and suggestions, some of which you can probably use, and our friendly counsel and assistance won't obligate you in any way.

Come in the first convenient day and let's talk it over.

Second Lieutenant on Rhine Gets as Much as Foch.

American Army of 15,000 Costs Germany More Than 80,000 French Troops in Mayence Zone.

Coblenz.—The pay of a second lieutenant in the American army on the Rhine is equivalent at present rates of exchange to that of Marshal Foch.

This may explain in part why the American army of 15,000 men costs Germany more than 80,000 French troops in the Mayence zone. It accounts also for the exaggerated statement from German sources that America's fighting force cost Germany more than all the allied armies of occupation.

Marshal Foch's salary is 33,000 francs. A second lieutenant in the American forces in Germany receives $2,120 a year, which extra allotments bring up to about $2,300. At the rate of exchange of 14 francs and a half to the dollar the second lieutenant draws about 33,350 francs a year.

The buck private receives $36 a month, a corporal $51.80, a sergeant $63 and a technical sergeant $74.20.

The French poilu at Mayence has to be content with 75 centimes a day, a corporal receives 90 centimes and a sergeant 2 francs.

With the rate of exchange about 60 to 65 marks to the dollar, the American soldier in Germany draws a larger salary than many of the high German city officials.

The American soldier in the Coblenz area lives better than the average bourgeois family of either France or Germany.

There never has been a soldier in any army who has had at his disposition the organization of welfare which the American soldier on the Rhine enjoys. Officers say the boys here are living the lives of gentlemen and behaving as such.

Although prohibition does not exist in Coblenz the correspondent has yet to see a drunken American soldier in the city, yet pay-day, the dread of the military police, has come and gone.

The Germans seem to bear them no animosity and they are popular with the fraulein and spooning might be added to the outdoor sports which find favor with many soldiers.

WOMAN HAS QUEER JOB

Two of the most popular publications in the United States today are Prenatal Care and Infant Care, issued by the children's bureau of the Department of Labor. Between three and four million copies are sent out from the bureau yearly, usually in answer to request. The person in charge of this gigantic distribution is Miss Hamilton. She takes care of the requests that come in from women all over the United States. The books are a compilation of directions for the care of babies from noted child specialists and are written in simple, easily understandable English, by Mrs. Max Wes..

DOG SMUGGLING BY AIRPLANE

British House of Lords Gets Promise of Minister of Agriculture to Abate It.

London.—Dog smuggling by airplane has arrested the interest of the house of lords, which recently devoted part of an afternoon to a discussion of the subject. The pampered toy dog was roundly excoriated by a number of their lordships, Lord Willoughby de Broke supporting Lord Bedislowe in a demand that "such useless brutes" be excluded from the country.

It was pointed out that it is an easy task for a person to smuggle the small lap dog into the country in a muff or basket. The ministry of agriculture promised to renew its vigilance in the matter of preventing dog smuggling and to increase the penalties if necessary.

Alaska to Supply Print Paper.

Washington.—There is sufficient pulp wood in Alaska to furnish perpetually one-third of the print paper consumption in the United States, Colonel Greeley, chief forester, announced after a survey. This could be put down on the Atlantic seaboard on a basis of between 3½ and 4 cents a pound, based on present rail freight rates, and practically 1 cent a pound by water, he said.

"COME ON, BOYS!"

Synopsis.—In December, 1918, four men gather in a hotel in Berne and hear one of the quartet outline a plan to paralyze Great Britain and at the same time seize world power. The other three, Hocking, American, and Steineman and Von Gratz, Germans, all millionaires, agree to the scheme, providing another man, Hiram Potts, an American, is taken in. The instigator of the plot gives his name as Comte de Guy, but when he leaves for England with his daughter he decides to use the name Carl Peterson. Capt. Hugh (Bull-Dog) Drummond, a retired officer, advertises for work that will give him excitement, signing "X10." As a result he meets Phyllis Benton, a young woman who answered his ad. She tells him of strange murders and robberies of which she suspects a band headed by Peterson and Henry Lakington. Drummond decides to go to The Larches, Miss Benton's home. Peterson and Lakington stop his car and look him over.

"He's so motionless," answered Hugh. "The bally fellow hasn't moved a muscle since I've been here. I believe he'd sit on a hornet's nest, and leave the inmates guessing. Great gift, Mr. Lakington. Shows a strength of will but rarely met with—a mind which rises above mere vulgar curiosity."

"It is undoubtedly a great gift to have such a mind, Captain Drummond," said Lakington. "And if it isn't born in a man, he should most certainly try to cultivate it. Shall we be seeing you this evening?"

Drummond shrugged his shoulders. "I'm the vaguest man that ever lived," he said lightly. "I might be listening to nightingales in the country; or I might be consuming steak and onions preparatory to going to a night club. So long. . . . Hope you don't break down again so suddenly."

He watched the Rolls-Royce start, but seemed in no hurry to follow suit. And his many friends, who were wont to regard Hugh Drummond as a mass of brawn not too plentifully supplied with brains, would have been puzzled had they seen the look of keen concentration on his face, as he stared along the white dusty road. He could not say why, but suddenly and very certainly the conviction had come to him that this was no hoax and no leg-pull—but grim and sober reality. In his imagination he heard the sudden sharp order to stop the instant they were over the hill, so that Peterson might have a chance of inspecting him; in a flash of intuition he knew that these two men were no ordinary people, and that he was suspect. Two thoughts were dominant in his mind. The first was that there was some mystery about the motionless, unnatural man who had sat beside the driver; the second was a distinct feeling of relief that his automatic was fully loaded.

THREE.

At half-past five he stopped in front of Godalming postoffice. To his surprise the girl handed him a wire, and Hugh tore the yellow envelope open quickly. It was from Denny, and it was brief and to the point:

"Phone message received. AAA. Must see you Carlton tea day after tomorrow. Going Godalming now. AAA. Message ends."

With a slight smile he noticed the military phraseology—Denny at one time in his career had been a signaler—and then he frowned. "Must see you." She should—at once.

He turned to the girl and inquired the way to The Larches. It was about two miles, he gathered, on the Guildford road, and impossible to miss. A biggish house standing well back in its own grounds.

"Is it anywhere near a house called The Elms?" he asked.

"Next door, sir," said the girl. "The gardens adjoin."

He thanked her, and having torn up the telegram into small pieces, he got into his car. There was nothing for it, he had decided, but to drive boldly up to the house, and say that he had come to call on Miss Benton. He had never been a man who beat about the bush, and simple methods appealed to him—a trait in his character which many a boxer, addicted to tortuous cunning in the ring, had good cause to remember. What more natural, he reflected, than to drive over and see such an old friend?

He had no difficulty in finding the house, and a few minutes later he was ringing the front-door bell. It was answered by a maidservant.

"Is Miss Benton in?" Hugh asked with a smile which at once won the girl's heart.

"She has only just come back from London, sir," she answered doubtfully. "I don't know whether . . ."

"Would you tell her that Captain Drummond called?" said Hugh as the maid hesitated. "That I happened to find myself near here, and came on chance of seeing her?"

Once again the smile was called into play, and the girl hesitated no longer. "Will you come inside, sir?" she said. "I will go and tell Miss Phyllis."

She ushered him into the drawing-room and closed the door. It was a charming room, just such as he would have expected with Phyllis. Big windows, opening down to the ground, led out on to a lawn, which was already a blaze of color. A few great oak trees threw a pleasant shade at the end of the garden, and partially showing through them, he could see another house which he rightly assumed was The Elms. In fact, even as he heard the door open and shut behind him, he saw Peterson come out of a small summer-house and commence strolling up and down, smoking a cigar. Then he turned round and faced the girl.

Charming as she had looked in London, she was doubly so now, in a simple linen frock which showed off her figure to perfection. But if he thought he was going to have any leisure to enjoy the picture undisturbed, he was soon disillusioned.

"Why have you come here, Captain Drummond?" she said, a little breathlessly. "I said the Carlton—the day after tomorrow."

"Unfortunately," said Hugh, "I'd left London before that message came. My servant wired it on to the post-office here. Not that it would have made any difference. I should have come, anyway."

An involuntary smile hovered round her lips for a moment; then she grew serious again. "It's very dangerous for you to come here," she remarked quietly. "If once those men suspect anything, God knows what will happen."

It was on the tip of his tongue to tell her that it was too late to worry about that; then he changed his mind. "And what is there suspicious," he asked, "in an old friend who happens to be in the neighborhood dropping in to call? Wherefore your telephone message? What's the worry?"

She bit her lip and drummed with her fingers on the arm of the chair. "If I tell you," she said at length, "will you promise me, on your word of honor, that you won't go blundering into The Elms, or do anything foolish like that?"

"At the present moment I'm very comfortable where I am, thanks," remarked Hugh.

"I know," she said; "but I'm so dreadfully afraid that you're the type of person who . . . who . . ." She paused at a loss for a word.

"Who bellows like a bull, and charges head down," interrupted Hugh with a grin. She laughed with him, and just for a moment their eyes met, and she read in his something quite foreign to the point at issue. In fact, it is to be feared that the question of Lakington and his companions was not engrossing Drummond's mind, as it doubtless should have been, to the exclusion of all else.

"It's Very Dangerous for You to Come Here," She Remarked Quietly.

"They're so utterly unscrupulous," she continued hurriedly, "so fiendishly clever, that even you would be a child in their hands."

Hugh endeavored to dissemble his pleasure at that little word "even" and only succeeded in frowning horribly.

"I will be discretion itself," he assured her firmly.

"I suppose I shall have to trust you," she said. "Have you seen the evening papers today?"

"I looked at the ones that come out in the morning labeled six p. m.; before I had lunch," he answered. "Is there anything of interest?"

She handed him a copy of the Planet. "Read that little paragraph in the second column." She pointed to it, as he took the paper, and Hugh read it aloud.

"Mr. Hiram C. Potts—the celebrated American millionaire—is progressing favorably. He has gone into the country for a few days, but is sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual." He laid down the paper and looked at the girl sitting opposite. "One is pleased," he remarked in a puzzled tone, "for the sake of Mr. Potts. To be ill and have a name like that is more than most men could stand. . . . But I don't quite see . . ."

"That man was stopping at the Carlton, where he met LaRington," said the girl. "He is a multi-millionaire, over here in connection with some big steel trust; and when multi-millionaires get friendly with Lakington, their health frequently does suffer."

"But this paper says he's getting better," objected Drummond. "'Sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual.'"

"If he is sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual, why did he send his confidential secretary away yesterday morning on an urgent mission to Belfast?"

"Search me," said Hugh. "Incidentally, how do you know he did?"

"I asked at the Carlton this morning," she answered. "I said I'd come after a job as typist for Mr. Potts. They told me at the inquiry office that he was ill in bed and unable to see anybody. So I asked for his secretary, and they told me what I've just told you—that he had left for Belfast that morning and would be away several days. It may be that there's nothing in it; on the other hand, it may be that there's a lot. And it's only by following up every possible clue," she continued fiercely, "that I can hope to beat those fiends and get daddy out of their clutches."

Drummond nodded gravely, and did not speak. For into his mind had flashed suddenly the remembrance of that sinister, motionless figure seated by the chauffeur. The wildest guesswork certainly—no vestige of proof—and yet, having once come, the thought stuck. And as he turned it over in his mind, almost prepared to laugh at himself for his credulity—millionaires are not removed against their will, in broad daylight, from one of the biggest hotels in London, to sit in immovable silence in an open car—the door opened and an elderly man came in.

Hugh rose, and the girl introduced the two men. "An old friend, daddy," she said. "You must have heard me speak of Captain Drummond."

"I don't recall the name at the moment, my dear," he answered courteously—a fact which was hardly surprising—"but I fear I'm getting a little forgetful. You'll stop and have some dinner, of course."

Hugh bowed. "I should like to, Mr. Benton. Thank you very much. I'm afraid the hour of my call was a little informal, but being round in these parts, I felt I must come and look Miss Benton up."

His host smiled absentmindedly, and walking to the window, stared through the gathering dusk at the house opposite, half hidden in the trees. And Hugh, who was watching him from under lowered lids, saw him suddenly clench both hands in a gesture of despair.

It cannot be said that dinner was a meal of sparkling gaiety. Mr. Benton was palpably ill at ease, and beyond a few desultory remarks spoke hardly at all; while the girl, who sat opposite Hugh, though she made one or two valiant attempts to break the long silences, spent most of the meal in covertly watching her father. If anything more had been required to convince Drummond of the genuineness of his interview with her at the Carlton the preceding day, the atmosphere at this strained and silent party supplied it.

As if unconscious of anything peculiar he rambled on in his usual inconsistent method, heedless of whether he was answered or not; but all the time his mind was busily working. He had already decided that a Rolls-Royce was not the only car on the market which could break down mysteriously, and with the town so far away, his host could hardly fail to ask him to stop the night. And then—he had not yet quite settled how—he proposed to have a closer look at The Elms.

At length the meal was over, and the maid, placing the decanter in front of Mr. Benton, withdrew from the room.

"You'll have a glass of port, Captain Drummond?" remarked his host, removing the stopper, and pushing the bottle toward him. "An old pre-war wine which I can vouch for."

Hugh smiled, and even as he lifted the heavy old cut glass, he stiffened suddenly in his chair. A cry—half shout, half scream, and stifled at once—had come echoing through the open windows. With a crash the stopper fell from Mr. Benton's nerveless fingers, breaking the finger-bowl in front of him, while every vestige of color left his face.

"It's something these days to be able to say that," remarked Hugh, pouring out himself a glass. "Wine, Miss Benton?" He looked at the girl, who was staring fearfully out of the window, and forced her to meet his eye. "It will do you good."

His tone was compelling, and after a moment's hesitation, she pushed the glass over to him. "Will you pour it out?" she said, and he saw that she was trembling all over.

"Did you—did you hear—anything?" With a vain endeavor to speak calmly, his host looked at Hugh.

"That night-bird?" he answered easily. "Eerie noises they make, don't they? Sometimes in France, when everything was still, and only the ghostly green flares went hissing up, one used to hear 'em. Startled nervous sentries out of their lives." He talked on, and gradually the color came back to the other man's face. But Hugh noticed that he drained his port at a gulp, and immediately refilled his glass. . . .

Outside everything was still; no repetition of that short, strangled cry again disturbed the silence. With the training bred of many hours in No Man's Land, Drummond was listening, even while he was speaking, for the faintest suspicious sound—but he heard nothing. The soft whispering night-noises came gently through the window; but the man who had screamed once did not even whimper again. He remembered hearing a similar cry near the brick-stacks at Guinchy, and two nights later he had found the giver of it, at the edge of a mine-crater, with glazed eyes that still held in them the horror of the final second. And more persistently than ever, his thoughts centered on the fifth occupant of the Rolls-Royce.

It was with almost a look of relief that Mr. Benton listened to his tale of woe about his car.

"Of course you must stop here for the night," he cried. "Phyllis, my dear, will you tell them to get a room ready?"

With an inscrutable look at Hugh, in which thankfulness and apprehension seemed mingled, the girl left the room. There was an unnatural glitter in her father's eyes—a flush on his cheeks hardly to be accounted for by the warmth of the evening; and it struck Drummond that during the time he had been pretending to look at his car, Mr. Benton had been fortifying himself. It was obvious, even to the soldier's unprofessional eye, that the man's nerves had gone to pieces, his daughter's worst forebodings were likely to be fulfilled. He talked disjointedly and fast; his hands were not steady, and he seemed to be always waiting for something to happen.

Hugh had not been in the room ten minutes before his host produced the whisky, and during the time that he took to drink a mild nightcap, Mr. Benton succeeded in lowering three extremely strong glasses of spirit. And what made it the more sad was that the man was obviously not a heavy drinker by preference.

At eleven o'clock Hugh rose and said good night.

"You'll ring if you want anything, won't you?" said his host. "We don't have very many visitors here, but I hope you'll find everything you require. Breakfast at nine."

Drummond closed the door behind him, and stood for a moment in silence, looking round the hall. It was deserted, but he wanted to get the geography of the house firmly imprinted on his mind. He stepped across toward the drawing-room. Inside, as he hoped, he found the girl.

She rose the instant he came in, and stood by the mantelpiece with her hands locked.

"What was it?" she half whispered—"that awful noise at dinner?"

He looked at her gravely for a while, and then he shook his head. "Shall we leave it as a night-bird for the present?" he said quietly. Then he leaned toward her, and took her hands in his own. "Go to bed, little girl," he ordered; "this is my show. And, may I say, I think you're just wonderful. Thank God you saw my advertisement!"

Gently he released her hands, and walking to the door, held it open for her. "If by any chance you should hear things in the night—turn over and go to sleep again."

"But what are you going to do?" she cried.

Hugh grinned. "I haven't the remotest idea," he answered. "Doubtless the Lord will provide."

The instant the girl had left the room Hugh switched off the lights, and stepped across to the curtains which covered the long windows. He pulled them aside, letting them come together behind him; then, cautiously, he unbolted one side of the big center window. Silently he dodged across the lawn toward the big trees at the end, and leaning up against one of them, he proceeded to make a more detailed survey of his objective, The Elms. It was the same type of house as the one he had just left, and the grounds seemed about the same size. A wire fence separated the two places, and in the darkness Hugh could just make out a small wicket-gate, closing a path which connected both houses. He tried it, and found to his satisfaction that it opened silently.

Save for one room on the ground-floor the house was in darkness, and Hugh determined to have a look at that room. There was a chink in the curtains, through which the light was streaming out, which struck him as having possibilities.

Keeping under cover, he edged toward it, and, at length, he got into a position from which he could see inside. And what he saw made him decide to chance it, and go even closer.

Seated at the table was a man he did not recognize; while on either side of him sat Lakington and Peterson. Lying on a sofa smoking a cigarette and reading a novel was a tall dark girl, who seemed completely uninterested in the proceedings of the other three. Hugh placed her at once as the doubtful daughter Irma, and resumed his watch on the group at the table.

A paper was in front of the man, and Peterson, who was smoking a large cigar, was apparently suggesting that he should make use of the pen which Lakington was obligingly holding in readiness. In all respects a harmless tableau, save for one small thing—the expression on the man's face. Hugh had seen it before often—only then it had been called shell-shock. The man was dazed, semi-unconscious. Every now and then he stared round the room, as if bewildered; then he would shake his head and pass his hand wearily over his forehead. For a quarter of an hour the scene continued; then Lakington produced an instrument from his pocket. Hugh saw the man shrink back in terror, and reach for the pen. But what impressed him most in that momentary flash of action was Peterson. There was something inhuman in his complete passivity. Even as he watched the man signing his name, no trace of emotion showed on his face—whereas on Lakington's there shone a fiendish satisfaction.

The document was still lying on the table, when Hugh produced his revolver. He knew there was foul play about, and the madness of what he had suddenly made up his mind to do never struck him; being that manner of fool, he was made that way. But he breathed a pious prayer that he would shoot straight—and then he held his breath. The crack of the shot and the bursting of the only electric light bulb in the room were almost simultaneous, and the next second, with a roar of "Come on, boys," he burst through the window. At an immense advantage over the others, who could see nothing for the moment, he blundered round the room. He timed the blow at Lakington to a nicety; he hit him straight on the point of the jaw and he felt the man go down like a log. Then he grabbed at the paper on the table, which tore in his hand, and picking the dazed signer up bodily, he rushed through the window onto the lawn. There was not an instant to be lost; only the impossibility of seeing when suddenly plunged into darkness, had enabled him to pull the thing off so far. And before that advantage disappeared he had to be back at The Larches with his burden, no light weight for even a man of his strength to carry.

But there seemed to be no pursuit, no hue and cry. As he reached the little gate he paused and looked back, and he fancied he saw outside the window a gleam of white, such as a shirt front. He lingered for an instant, peering into the darkness and recovering his breath, when with a vicious phut something buried itself in the tree beside him. Drummond lingered no more; long years of experience left no doubt in his mind as to what that something was.

The rescued man turns out to be Potts, the American.

MINUTE MATTERS MEAN MUCH

Statesmen and Others Wrong When They Scoff at Work Done by Research Departments.

The man who gives up his lifetime to putting science at the service of business finds himself eternally asked, "What's the use?" Statesmen rise from their seats and say:

"I see that some scientist fattening at the government trough has measured a hundred-thousandth of an inch. What's the use?"

Hard-headed—solid-headed—business men read of research departments and snort in disgust: "What's the use? The old rule of thumb is the common sense way."

We think of railroads as progressive—of railroad men as efficient. Are they? Not if the Railway Age is to be believed, remarks the Nation's Business.

There are only two test plants of locomotives in the country, one owned by the Pennsylvania, the other at the University of Illinois. Only a few railroads try out locomotives on road service by means of a dynamometer car. What's the use?

One road that did found that by putting an exhaust tip three-eighths of an inch smaller on a Mikado type locomotive it increased the firebox temperature 400 degrees and saved $57,000 a year in coal. On another line tests made it possible so to alter a locomotive as to reduce its fuel consumption 10 per cent and permit it to haul three more passenger cars on less coal and water.

That's what's the use!

When the Ships Come In.

In Hawaii, the Philippines and Cuba one of the chief topics of interest to the islanders is the arrival and departure of steamers. Newspapers devote whole pages to these boat movements, to lists of the passengers, interviews with notables on board and stories of the voyage by members of the officers' staffs and crews. In fact the arrival of the evening train in a mainland country town holds no more interest for the residents than the maritime news has for the people of Honolulu, Manila and Havana. The Cuban capital has a new object of interest in this regard in the lately instituted daily air service between that city and Key West. The planes are of the United States navy scout type, each carrying eight passengers.

The "Week-End."

Week-end means the end of the week, but by extension, the period from Friday night to Monday morning. In England the term is also used attributively, as the week-end holidays, and from this has sprung the verbal phrase "to week-end," meaning to employ the week-end as a holiday season. A well-known authority in alluding to the expression, week-end, says: "This brief holiday has got into serious history. No less an authority than Dr. R. S. Gardiner notes in his "Oliver Cromwell" that "Oliver—if he invented nothing else—may be regarded as the inventor of that modified form of enjoyment to which hard-worked citizens have in our day given the name of the week-end."

FELT LIKE AN IRON BAND AROUND HEAD

Mrs. Osborne Says She Shudders When She Thinks How She Suffered.

"For years," said Mrs. V. B. Osborne, of 718 Lancaster Ave., Lexington, Ky., "I have been in a run-down condition; nervous, weak and dizzy. I was actually so nervous that any sudden noise or excitement would produce a palpitation of my heart that frightened me. I absolutely could not climb stairs, for to attempt such would thoroughly exhaust me.

"I had nervous headaches and when they came on it seemed that an iron band was drawn tight around my head. I now shudder when I think of those headaches. My stomach was weak and I could not digest the lightest liquid food. Any food of a solid nature caused nausea and the sickening sensation remained for hours.

"My misery was almost unbearable. My sleep was never sound and I was worn out all the time. My condition was indeed a very deplorable one. I finally sought treatment in Cincinnati, but nothing helped me one particle. I was on the verge of giving up in despair when a neighbor pleaded with me to try Tanlac. I obtained a bottle of the medicine and began its use.

"I began improving at once and soon felt my nervousness and dizziness disappearing. Then my headaches left me and I realized my strength had returned. My appetite and digestion improved and I am now so much better in every way. This Tanlac is a wonderful medicine and the only one that ever really helped me. I hope every poor woman who is suffering as I did will try it."

Tanlac is sold by leading druggists everywhere.—Adv.

BIRDS AS STREET CLEANERS

Vultures Employed for the Purpose in Costa Rica, and Traveler Says They Are Efficient.

Garbage collectors in Costa Rica enjoy their occupation, because they eat what they find. In his book, "Sailing South" Philip S. Marden writes as follows:

"I was awakened on the first morning in town by a sound of wheels in the street below, and looked out. It was an impressive sight. The garbage man was abroad on his scavenging rounds. Ahead of his open wagon walked in a sober platoon four enormous vultures, all in sable and maintaining the chastened demeanor of undertakers at an open grave. Behind the wagon walked half a dozen other vultures similarly sedate. And around the rim of the cart, perched in solemn row, sat twenty-one other birds of the same species and same somber hue. I would fain have immortalized the scene, but the camera, alas, wasn't loaded. I began to understand why the streets of San Jose, which leave much to be desired in other respects, are at least so notably clean. The buzzards attend to that!"

Easy on Them.

A battery of big guns had just sent its message of destruction into a company of Germans at St. Mihiel, and when the debris had settled all to be observed were a few scraps of gray cloth scattered about.

"Wow," ejaculated the supply officer, "but there sure are a lot of dead Jerries over there."

"I wouldn't go that far," replied the conservative medical major, suspiciously like all of his ilk. "But if they were my men and came to me, I admit I might mark them for light duty."—American Legion Weekly.

WAS FAMILIAR WITH CHROMO

Mrs. Newly Rich Somewhat Too Anxious to Air Her Knowledge, and Her Ignorance.

Harvey Maitland Watts, a Philadelphia art critic, said at a dinner in Rittenhouse square:

"The ignorance of the new rich in art matters is quite incredible. The wife of a new rich profiteer was buying pictures in a Walnut street shop the other day. After she had bought a number of costly pictures she said:

"'Now show me something a little cheaper for the back hall. It's dark there.'

"The salesman brought out another picture.

"'This, madam,' he said, 'is only a chromo, and we could let you have it for nearly nothing.'

"The new rich lady nodded in a sage way.

"'Yes, of course,' she said, 'Chromo is a struggling and obscure artist, and he can't expect to command good prices till he makes a popular hit, can he?'"

There You Are.

"What is the shape of the world?" asked the village schoolmaster.

"Don't know sir," piped the class.

"Well, what is the shape of my snuff box?"

"Square, sir."

"No, no; I don't mean that one. I mean the one I use on Sundays."

"Round, sir."

"Now, then; what is the shape of the world?"

"Square on week days and round on Sundays, sir!"

Line the Linoleum.

When purchasing linoleum for the floor it is a good idea to order a lining of felt. This precaution will probably prolong the use of the linoleum. It also deadens sound and makes the floor warmer in winter. It prevents the linoleum from expanding or contracting and it gives a softer tread, all advantages worth considering.

PORTABLE CRANE IS USEFUL TOOL

Convenient Means Provided for Lifting Heavy Parts From Automobile Chassis.

IT IS EASILY CONSTRUCTED

Old Iron Pipe, Bed Casters, Bicycle Chain and Sprockets and Few Other Pieces Are Essential—Big Help in Repairing.

A portable crane for a garage is one of the most necessary tools required. It provides a means for lifting motors, gear cases and other heavy parts from automobile chassis.

Easily Put Together.

The one illustrated is easily constructed of old iron pipe, bed casters, bicycle chain and sprockets and one crank and one gear, several pieces of band iron, a length of steel cable, a wood drum, old sash pulley at the top, nuts, bolts, etc. As this will weigh only 200 pounds, or possibly less, it is readily placed in almost any position and is a great help to all repairmen.

Details of Lifting Parts.

Detachable hooks of different sizes may be used so as to engage different size parts to be lifted. The connecting pipes of the frame are standard fittings bent to fit and drilled for one-quarter-inch bolts to give additional strength. The catch is made from a piece of band iron and also its clamp. To release the tension or lower the article, press down on the handle, hold the latch or catch up, and allow the handle to reverse until correct height of article is found; then release the latch, which will hold the gear as before at any desired position.—P. P. Avery in Popular Science Monthly.

Protect Spare Casing.

Special tire paints designed to protect the spare tire from injury caused by light, air and moisture can now be purchased. These paints are black and give the tire a glossy, smooth finish which greatly enhances its appearance. No special skill is required in the application. The use of a protective coating on the spare tire is desirable, for it is often exposed to the action of the elements for months before it is put into use. During this time it is slowly deteriorating so that its mileage is gradually cut down. A suitable coating, therefore, not only stops deterioration, but also adds to the appearance of the article.

SPEEDOMETER HELPS KEEP TRACK OF CAR

One of Most Necessary Adjuncts to Automobile.

When Derangements Occur They Are Easily and Cheaply Corrected and Should Be Taken Care of for Protection.

It is true that a car can be run without a speedometer, but it as also true that when it is so run, it is like a ship without a log-book and like a business without accounts.

To the careful and prudent motorist the speedometer, and especially the mileage recording part of it, is essential to enable him to keep track of the performance of his car. All too frequently, when one asks a motorist: "How far has your car run?" the answer is: "I don't know. The speedometer went out of commission early in the season and I have not had it repaired." Speedometer shafts do occasionally break and other things happen to these instruments once in a while, but when these derangements occur they are easily and cheaply corrected and should be taken care of at once or valuable car records are irretrievably lost.

Traffic officers regard with incredulity the estimates of car speed given by drivers whose speedometers are not working, and there is always a certain measure of protection in having speed indications always before one's eyes when driving. The operator with the broken-down speedometer can know nothing as to whether or not he is getting his money's worth out of the gasoline he buys. He can only guess as to this.

It is the same with his lubrication oil. It may be that it is being thrown away at a ruinous rate. What can such an operator know in regard to the performance of his tires and how can he make any definite complaint to the tire dealer in case they seem not to have given satisfactory mileage?

The lubrication instructions very likely state that his rear-axle housing requires repacking after each 1,000 miles of running, but how can he know when to have this very necessary work done? When he comes to sell his car and the prospective customer asks how far it has been run, what can the owner do but give a very unconvincing guess?

The odometer is the silent accountant of the motorcar. Give it a chance to do its valuable work?

RUBBER COVERING FOR LAMPS

Waterproof Bags Are Particularly Serviceable for Protection on Rainy Days.

In the cities one frequently sees little rubber bags or covers on the headlamps on rainy days. This is particularly true where the vehicle is chauffeur driven, for that gentleman knows the value of keeping the water off these lamps, if they are to look their best in sunny weather. Why not take a hint from the chauffeur and make or have made for you a couple of waterproof bags to protect the lamps? You will find that they "stay young" much longer if so treated.

Don't Use a Reamer.

Never use a reamer on the inside of a pipe. The scale inside a pipe caused by the flux used in welding or brazing is as hard as glass and will turn the edge of any reamer that was ever made.

Oil for Bearings.

In ball bearings that move with great rapidity ordinary lubricating oil is best to use. On the other hand for slow-moving bearings semihard graphite grease is most satisfactory.

Proud of Her Daddy.

Helen was playing out in front of her house Flag day and evidently had noticed the flags that were out in many of the homes. This same day happened to be her dad's birthday but she was not aware of it until she had been let in on the big secret of a surprise that was in store for her dad when he came home for the evening meal and that she was not to tell any one about it.

When given this information she exclaimed, "Is today daddy's birthday?"

When told that it was, she remarked quite decidedly, her big eyes getting larger, "Oh now I know why all the flags are out."

Knew What He Wanted.

He is a bright little patron of the branch library and knows well the books suitable to his age and grade.

However, the more difficult and unfamiliar titles of the high school reading lists for which he is frequently sent sometimes stump him.

"I want the three mosquiters," he announced hurriedly on his last visit.

"You mean the 'Three Musketeers,'" said the librarian, noting the list from which he was reading.

"Maybe I do," he agreed promptly. Then he chuckled good humoredly. "Anyhow, they're both good drawers of blood," he added.

Under the Circumstances, It Would Seem, Mrs. Paula's Friend Had Made Wise Decision.

Now, everybody in town knows that Mrs. Paula Platt was talking of making a visit to her married daughter in Ohio. She had been talking about it for two years, but age and the natural timidity of a woman long a widow had postponed the great event from month to month, until the neighbors began to wonder whether it would ever come to pass.

So one morning when Uncle Tom Flitters met a friend of Mrs. Paula's, there was a twinkle in his eyes as he asked:

"When is Mrs. Paula goin' out to Ohio?"

"Don't ask me," said the other. "I don't know nothin' about it. If I tell her to go, she says we all want to get rid of her, and if I tell her to stay at home, she says I am mean. I ain't sayin' a word!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Intelligent.

You may not believe it, but we have this on creditable authority:

A marine reported the loss of his gun.

"Was there any mark on it," asked the corporal, "by which you might recognize it?"

"No, I think not," answered the marine.

"Sure?"

"Well, come to think of it, there was a name on it?"

"What?"

ANCIENT AND MODERN ROME

World-Famous Buildings Occupy Sacred Sites in the Old "Capital of the World."

Ancient Rome was built on the hills south of the River Tiber. Tradition regarded the Palatine as the site of Romulus' Urbs Quadrata. Excavations have brought to light remains of earlier settlement and a pre-historic necropolis. The capitoline was the center of republican and imperial Rome. One of the principal ancient monuments is Hadrian's mausoleum which, as the castle of S. Angelo, was the citadel of medieval Rome. West of this stood Caligula's circus in which Nero tortured the Christians; its site is now occupied by St. Peter's, the chief shrine of Roman Catholicism, reputed to be the largest church in the world, occupying 18,000 square yards and measuring 435 feet in its highest part. North of St. Peter's is the Vatican palace, which covers 13½ acres and comprises over 1,000 halls, chapels and rooms. The pantheon, built by Agrippa in 27 B. C. and restored by Hadrian, is said to be the best-preserved ancient building in the city.

Of No Importance.

Painters certainly are touchy, when ignorant people dare to comment upon art. A woman of no importance as an art critic was studying the work of a well-known artist and remarked:

"Really, of these two pictures, I don't know which I like best."

"Don't bother, madam," said the quiet voice of the artist, who was standing just behind her, "it doesn't matter."

PUBLICITY COMMITTEE.

ADDITIONAL TAX DUE

Collector of Internal Revenue H. T. Graham has announced that the examination and audit of income tax returns, Forms 1040 A, income of less than $5000, for the year 1920, has been completed in his office.

The audit has resulted in the discovery of additional tax due from a large number of taxpayers, as well as the overpayment of tax in some instances.

The reasons given by the auditors for the corrections in the amount of tax due are—mathematical errors, personal exemption for single and married persons, exemption for "head of family," allowance for dependents, items of expense which were of a personal character rather than a business expense, improvements and repairs to taxpayers' residences, and charitable contributions in excess of 15 per cent. of net income.

Collector Graham has addressed letters to taxpayers whose returns show additional tax due, explaining in detail the basis for the assessment of the additional tax. This tax must be paid in full at once, as no provision is made in the law or regulations for quarterly payments, as in the case of the tax reported on March 15 of each year.

Checks have been sent to those taxpayers who filed returns in February, showing an overpayment of tax, taxpayers who filed returns at a later date showing an overpayment of tax, will receive checks June 1.

Incomplete returns and returns requiring further information from taxpayers will be placed in the hands of field deputies for investigation.

Road Work Progressing Rapidly

Work is being pushed rapidly on the new State Highway from Odessa to Blackbird. Having finished a section of the new boulevard which extends from Pine Tree, near Townsend, to the new bridge which is being constructed over the Appoquinimink creek, near Odessa, the contractors have begun to lay the new State highway from Pine Tree to Blackbird, and four weeks will be required to finish this portion of the work. From Blackbird to Armstrong's Corner, grading is being hastened and much of the route is ready for the mixer. Concrete will be laid on this section as soon as the Pine Tree-Blackbird stretch is done.

A Correction

The Smyrna Times of June 8th, in a baseball article makes use of the following:

"Considering that the Middletown team consists almost entirely of hired semi-professional players, and that Smyrna is a home team, our boys did exceedingly well."

For the enlightenment of the Smyrna Editor, I would say that seven out of the nine players, that were in the lineup of the Middletown team on Saturday, live and vote in the town of Middletown. There was one player on the team from Odessa. None of the players are receiving a penny for their services, with the exception of the pitchers who receives $10.00 per game. Will the Smyrna Editor vouch for the residence of the twelve Smyrna players who played and accompanied the team from that place?

When baseball teams come to Middletown, we never ask what their place of residence is, or how much they receive for playing, and if we get "trimmed" we say we were outplayed, and have no excuses.

Sec. Middletown Athletic Association.

Shortage in Berry Boxes

A demand for strawberry boxes is being made by shippers from points on the Peninsula. Berries are decaying because of the failure of the shippers to receive an adequate number of boxes to care for the crop, which this year surpassed their greatest hope Notwithstanding the cold waves of the spring the shipments to date far exceed those of last year.

A Good Idea

County Agent H. B. Derrick, after describing how the hail ruined a number of Kent County wheat crops, suggests that those Kent Co., farmers whose wheat escaped should donate one bushel out of every 100 bushels to provide seed wheat for their unfortunate neighbors

It is co-operation and courtesy too thus to apply the golden rule to farming.

A MASTER PICTURE - - - BETTER THAN THE BOOK

"BLACK BEAUTY," known and loved for forty years in every part of the world where books are read has come to life.

The horse whose aurobiography was recorded by Anna Sewell, to delight many millions of readers in every civilized country on the globe, is to be seen in action. His life, through all its changing phases of playful colthood, early pleasures, trials and fears; its contact with the lives of other horses and of human beings; its hardships, dangers and triumphs—all these are unfolded on the motion-picture screen.

The screen version of "Black Beauty" is all that the book was and more. Every bit of the story has been told, and additional thrills have been interpolated. "Black Beauty" is a story of human beings, as well as of horses.

In the film version a thrilling and romantic drama has been woven about the human beings, and in many phases of this "Black beauty" participates without being aware of its nature, and of the big part he is playing. The RACE SCENE, in which "Black Beauty" saves the day, provides one of the greatest screen thrills ever filmed.

Jean Paige, in the leading role of "Jessie Gordon," is a sweet, appealing heroine, and her portrayal will long be remembered.

They never made a cigarette like this in my day—

The Camel idea wasn't born then. It was the exclusive expert Camel blend that revolutionized cigarette smoking.

That Camel blend of choice Turkish and Domestic tobaccos hits just the right spot. It gives Camels such mellow mildness and fragrance!

The first time I smoked Camels I knew they were made for me. I knew they were the smoothest, finest cigarette in the world, at any price.

Nobody can tell me anything different.
